

CREATING AND LEADING A DIFFERENTIATED CLASSROOM

Students in today's schools are becoming more academically diverse, which means that teachers must formulate philosophies and teaching strategies to reach students' varying readiness, interest and style preferences. Differentiated instruction seems promising as a response to the variety of learning needs students bring to school every day. The institute will focus on two overarching questions: How do we lead a schoolwide implementation of differentiation? What teaching practices can we use as we make curriculum more responsive to students' needs? Come join us for one or more of our institute sessions featuring Carol Tomlinson, Ph.D.
